

I have scarcity.

Who has things we use to satisfy our wants or needs?

I have resources.

Who has not enough resources to satisfy our wants or needs?

I have limited resources.

Who has decisions we make?

I have choices.

Who has the best thing you give up to get something?

I have opportunity cost.

Who has a person who uses a good or service?

I have consumer.

Who has things people want that you can hold or touch?

I have goods.

Who has the money you earn?

I have services.

Who has a person who makes a good or provides a service?

I have human resources.

Who has the many things nature provides that we use to satisfy our wants and needs?

I have income.

Who has things people do for other people?

I have producer.

Who has resources found in people, such as their skills and ideas?

I have natural resources.

Who has goods that are used to make other goods or to provide services?

I have capital resources.

Who has people that depend on each other?

I have specialization.

Who has to trade by exchanging goods or services?

I have coins.

Who has a type of money invented by the ancient Chinese to take the place of coins?

I have interdependence.

Who has doing a certain job?

I have barter.

Who has money that is made from metal?

I have paper money.

Who has a charge for borrowing money?

I have interest.

Who has a place to store or save money?

I have supply.

Who has how much of something that is wanted or needed?

I have investments.

Who has the amount of money something is worth?

I have a bank.

Who has how much you have of something?

I have demand.

Who has something you can use your money to buy that should increase in value?

I have value.

Who has money collected by the government to pay for services?

I have taxes.

Who has paper money or coins that you have?

I have checks.

Who has buying something and promising to pay for it at a later time?

I have cash.

Who has something you use to pay for things with the money the bank is storing for you?

I have credit.

Who has when there is not enough of something you want?