Dear Artists,

The Smithsonian Institute will be opening a new Native American History Museum in the summer of 2003. This museum will display several artifacts from various tribes. As part of the grand opening festivities, the museum will also host a special children's display.

Our big event is rapidly approaching and we are currently in need of second grade artists to create six sculptures. These sculptures will represent three of the different Native American Regions. They will be placed along the entrance of the museum. Since these sculptures will become a permanent part of the museum, you may need to contact your local art teacher for material suggestions. If you are interested in creating sculptures for our museum, please email me and I will provide you with a packet of information.

Sincerely,

Mr. Totem
