

Autism Acceptance Month | Week Three Reflection

This week you heard from autistic educators and behavior analysts and their perspectives on supporting autistic learners. Consider the following questions:

- What is coming up for you as you reflect on what you've learned this week?
- Listening can take many forms: watching someone's behavior, listening to their voice and experience, recognizing and affirming. What are ways that we can listen to our autistic students in our daily practice?
- What strategies did you learn this week that might challenge the way you've previously worked with your autistic students?
- What might be supporting your autistic students in your school environment?
- What might be negatively impacting your autistic students?
- How might you bring this back to your teams and continue your reflection and learning?